RMIT Update

Elite Athlete Entrance Program

RMIT are introducing an alternative entry scheme to applicants who are elite or emerging athletes where training and/or competitive commitments have significantly affected their academic performance in Year 11 and/or Year 12. Applicants could gain admission to a program at RMIT with an ATAR five points below the clearly-in.

Eligibility is based on competition at a state, national or international level. Students must provide evidence of the impact their sporting commitments have had on their secondary education. Applications from elite athletes, coaches and sports officials will be considered, taking into consideration academic results, community or voluntary activity and motivation for further study. Successful applicants will have access to scholarships and flexible study assistance once they are enrolled at RMIT.

Applications can be made on the RMIT website and must be received by Sunday 16 December 2018 for Semester 1, 2019.

'Girledworld World of Work Summit'

RMIT will be the new hosts for the annual 'Girledworld World of Work Summit'.

This event is STEM-based (Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics) and will see hundreds of secondary school girls (Years 9 - 12) attend two full days of enterprise skill-building, career planning and real world problem solving. Why not join a group of future female change makers from across Australia and learn from influential speakers, founders and role models? These 'Future of Work' sessions will help you gain micro-credentials in critical thinking and design thinking. A unique weekend programme providing access to world-shaping STEM and leadership training!

When: Sat 16th & Sun 17th June 2018

Times: 9:30am – 5:00pm

Where: RMIT City campus, Building 80, 445 Swanston St Melbourne.

Industry Focus - Arts Musician

Musicians can write, arrange, orchestrate, perform, record and conduct musical compositions. A musician may perform a variety of tasks depending on their area of specialisation. It is helpful to have skills and flair with music i.e. a mastery of one or more styles of music such as classical, jazz or pop as well as self-confidence, motivation, dedication, determination, good concentration and communication skills and overall stamina for performance.

There are a variety of specialisations in the music industry and these can include:

- Music Arranger – transcribes musical compositions or melodic lines to adapt and modify them for particular performance formats, such as orchestras, bands, choral groups or solo performance. People with these skills may proceed to a number of jobs, including music teacher, music director, conductor or record producer.
- Music Critic – is employed by media publishers to report on the performing arts. Local areas usually have part-time critics who report regularly on performances and visiting artists in the local media.
- Musicologist – interprets musical history and style. Musicologists generally work as lecturers.
- Performing Musician/Instrumentalist – may play one or more instruments in recital performances. This may be in accompaniment only, or as a member of an orchestra, band or musical group, including chamber ensembles. Musicians spend a number of hours each day in private practice to prepare music for rehearsals and performance. They may record backing tracks and programme electronic devices to be used in performance. Musicians may need to listen to and analyse music in either written or recorded form to build their repertoire. They also need to prepare and maintain their instruments for peak performance. They may compose and write music and lyrics or combine and/or arrange music across a number of styles, including classical, pop, jazz, folk, country show music and various forms of dance music.

- Vocalist – may work solo, with an accompanist or with bands, ensembles, orchestras or in concert opera. Work can be on a casual or permanent basis. Vocalists develop a repertoire and many specialize in a particular style or work on stage, radio or television. They may entertain as soloists, perform in a group or play an instrument. Vocalists need to train and develop their voice and capacity to sing, as well as develop presentation and performance skills. They need to be able to understand music and be able to work with bands and orchestras.
- Classical Musician – is highly technical and develops a high level of ensemble skills. Classical musicians must develop the ability to adapt to the demands of international conductor and soloists. They develop knowledge of classical, opera and ballet repertoire, and may undertake additional training at music schools overseas.
- Composer – creates musical compositions for films, plays, television, concerts and operas. Composers may specialize in one type of music or in compositions of particular instruments. They may write lyrics to accompany the music.
- Music Conductor - conducts instrumental groups such as symphony orchestras and large bands. Conductors may audition and select members of a group. They choose music to accommodate the groups abilities and to suit different types of performance events. Conductors become familiar with the complete musical score, conduct rehearsals, instruct players on their performances and try to make the best use of each instrumentalist's talents. They conduct performances in which they control factors such as balance, rhythm, dynamics and timing to create an effect consistent with their own interpretation of the score.
- Ethnomusicologist – studies music in its cultural context and seeks to understand the relationship between musical cultures. They may work as composers, performers, lecturers or researchers. They usually work within an academic institution such as a university, exploring, studying, researching and writing scholarly articles on music or musicians. Fieldwork in various regions of the world may be required, where they record music from a particular area, ethnic group or performing group.
- Jazz Musician – often recognised for their superior skills in improvisation. Their ensemble skills are similar to those required in chamber groups.

There is much scope in the music industry with work available across a number of areas. Many musicians are self-employed or engaged through agents. You can become a music or singing teacher and set up your own practice or be appointed to the staff at a primary or secondary school, conservatorium, private music school or university. There are careers available with the Australian Broadcasting Corporation, commercial radio and television stations and Australian Defence Force, as well as work in music librarianship, arts administration, music journalism, music and instrument sales, music and record publishing, music direction and musicological research. A few factors may affect employment in certain companies i.e. government funding and level of activity in the hospitality industry.

To become a musician, you usually have to complete formal training in a chosen musical field, although some musicians are self-taught. You may like to consider a VET qualification in music. Applicants may be required to attend an audition, interview or musicianship/music proficiency theory test. Alternatively, you can become a musician by studying music at university. To get into these courses you usually need to gain your VCE having completed certain prerequisite subjects. Please refer to your chosen course(s) and institution(s) for further entry requirements and latest information.
