

Aberdeen Angus Cattle!

What are aberdeen angus?

Aberdeen angus are also known as black angus. Aberdeen angus cows originally came from Scotland, especially from areas like Aberdeen and Angus.

Appearance!

They are known for being naturally hornless, black (though some can be red) and having high quality Marbled meat. They are also known for being hardy, adoptable and good natured, making them popular with ranchers worldwide. They are medium to large in size. Adult cows usually weigh around 1,000 pounds. Bulls can weigh between 1,800 and 2,000 pounds.

Habitat

You can find aberdeen angus all over the world. They are raised in places like Australia, New Zealand, the United States, Canada, South America and the British Isles. In the United States Angus is the most popular type of cow for producing beef.

What makes angus cattle special?

Angus cattle are very tough. They can handle cold, snowy winters. Like those Scotland where they first lived. This makes them a strong and adoptable breed.

Physical traits of angus cattle!

Most angus cattle are black and do not have horns. This trait is called "polled" They also tend to grow up faster than some other British breeds.

How angus cattle are used.

The main reason people raise angus cattle is for their meat. Angus meat is often sold as a high quality product because of its excellent marbling . This has made it a favourite in many markets including Australia, Japan and the United Kingdom.