

The Industrial Revolution was detrimental to mankind Persuasive Essay collaboratively written by SSC

Without a doubt, the Industrial Revolution, a historical time of technological inventions, was detrimental to mankind. Child labour was horrific with no pay, education and along with that an unpredictable future! There were high levels of pollution at every location there was no escape; these times were extremely unhygienic. Factory worker deaths were commonly caused by unsafe working conditions. The amount of poor people rose and the amount of rich people increased so this caused an abundance of greed! Obviously, the Industrial Revolution was appalling; so why would we celebrate this dangerous time in human history?

Even though child labour was necessary for the world, it was dangerous and harmful! During the Industrial Revolution 84% of lower class children died of from illnesses and disease that came from unsafe conditions. Back then dinner cost as little as $1 and children couldn't afford it even after working in horrible conditions for a week. Excellent education was scarcely espied. Working in factories and mines made children have unpredictable futures, shortening their lifespan making them weaker and weaker. Child labour, a huge problem during the Industrial Revolution, is still a world wide quandary. Would you let children suffer in pain working in such hard environments?

The Industrial Revolution, a very disgraceful era for mankind, released an abundance of pollution causing immense amounts of damage. Since, pollution was erupted into our atmosphere, this caused mass extinction which brutally murdered more than 600 species and made them go extinct. How would you feel if you had to live in an unhygienic environment that could cause possible death? With hardly any clear air it was impossible to breathe the oxygen we need to survive! Were you aware during the Industrial Revolution the cities became incredibly crowded? In summary, the Industrial Revolution was a very traumatic time for citizens by having a high risk of death and substantial pollution.

Factories caused death, unhealthiness and unfair working conditions. Particularly, the working conditions were controversial and unsafe. When workers were within these conditions, it was a ginormous risk of death because of the catastrophic conditions. Would you want to be stuck in this death trap for eternity? Factories, a racist environment for poor people, caused conflict and limited their access to healthcare. How would you feel if you worked with untested machines, which resulted in horrific injuries or death. Therefore, that's why factories in the Industrial Revolution were so dangerous, brutal and unsafe.

Would you rather be poor and powerless or rich and selfish? Poor people had no say let alone a roof over their heads, and no power to change their ways of living. Although the middle class were average people, their needs were met because they had everyday jobs but little power. The upper class, rich and arrogant with ample control, didn't respect nor did they care for anyone else. The rich did not show kindness to the lower classes, because 80% of people were poor and 20% were middle and upper class. Feel for the poor, some had no housing and others worked for only a penny.

In conclusion, the Industrial Revolution resulted in child labour, pollution, gruesome working conditions and a gap in the wealth system. Despite the fact child labour was necessary for the world it was a horrific experience for the innocent children. Although machinery was useful in many way it was creating an abundance of pollution. Did you realise the factory conditions led to many detrimental outcomes to the body like unhealthy diseases and illnesses? The Industrial Revolution was clearly the one to blame for widening the gap between the rich and poor. Therefore, the Industrial Revolution was destructive to the globe and mankind.
