

In Focus Careers

September 2020

Hi All

Julia Gillard is Chair of the Board on the Global Partnership for Education and Director of Beyond Blue

In her Australia Institute webinar in early August she spoke mainly about education and about mental impacts of the pandemic

THE COVID GENERATION

It was the first time I heard the term COVID Generation. She said that people coming of age and looking for their first job in a severe economic downturn suffer significant long term negative impacts. She urged the development of resilient systems that reduce these negative impacts.

ALERT

She said we should watch for people who are disengaging. Beyond Blue and LifeLine have early intervention programs that can quickly suggest coping skills. CALD communities are particularly at risk.

BUILD BACK BETTER

It was also the first time I had heard of the Build Back Better movement which is gaining traction. There was background chat about a Universal Basic Income (UBI) to support The COVID Generation.

How to Get a Job in the 2020s

According to Gillian Kelly, one of Australia’s top recruiters, trends that she saw on the horizon this time last year are here or nearly here.

- Job seekers are now looking for gigs and opportunities rather than traditional jobs.
- They are looking for a position that fits their skills, not a job title.
- You need to be able to tell the story of how your experience demonstrates your potential in the new situation.
- Recruiters are seeing that those who DID NOT get the job are a great source of potential talent.

Source From a Massive Private Database

RecruitBot partners with public and private data companies to build and maintain the largest collection of global candidate profiles in the world. With 100+ million U.S. candidates in our system (and tens of millions more globally), you'll be sure to find thousands of worthy candidates—whether you're looking for software developers in San Francisco or payroll specialists in Mumbai.

Companies like Recruitbot are using multiple channels to source talent. They are not just posting jobs. They are going out into the market to find talent.

CREATE YOUR ONLINE PRESENCE

Job seekers must be visible to recruiters. They need to build their social capital by posting on the usual sites like LinkedIn and on professional sites, like the Career Advisors Association, special interest groups like Women in Technology WA or hobby sites Left Handed Tap Dancers Association.

You need to be proactive to remain visible, credible and connected.

Q. Where do you find your highest-quality candidates?

Gem 2020 Recruiting Trends

Having made the point that recruiters for big companies are pivoting to online talent searches, Gillian then showed a slide that identified the importance of referrals.

SIDE RTO

Wayne Wilson from SIDE RTO is building their capacity to deliver more VET programs to West Australia's RRR students.

"School of Isolated & Distance Education (SIDE) is working with regional schools to bring qualifications to students who have traditionally struggled to access training specifically tailored to local needs. SIDE RTO has been created to address this in regional Western Australia and partnerships will be established with regional schools where a need exists.

The training delivery will be based upon STEM values with learners and educators receiving support to deliver a quality program. An anticipated by-product of this new approach will be positive for some students in the form of ongoing employment, traineeships or apprenticeships. SIDE RTO will be working with industry to identify upcoming opportunities in regional WA and it is collaborations with organisations such as Institute of Plumbing Australia which will help facilitate this.

Students with Disability Should Apply to TAFE Early

Students who have a disability should get in touch with their TAFE college early so that they have time to make reasonable adjustments to learning spaces.

If special equipment or teaching resources need to be bought or built, that can take time.

Students who don't give the college time to prepare the work/study space can be unnecessarily disadvantaged while the resources are prepared.

COVID Generation Learnings

In early August The Australia Institute put on a webinar called The Pandemic, Mental Health and Beyond with Julia Gillard as the keynote speaker. She is now Chair of Beyond Blue and Chair of the Board for the Global Partnership for Education so naturally much of the conversation was about mental health issues during the pandemic and about education.

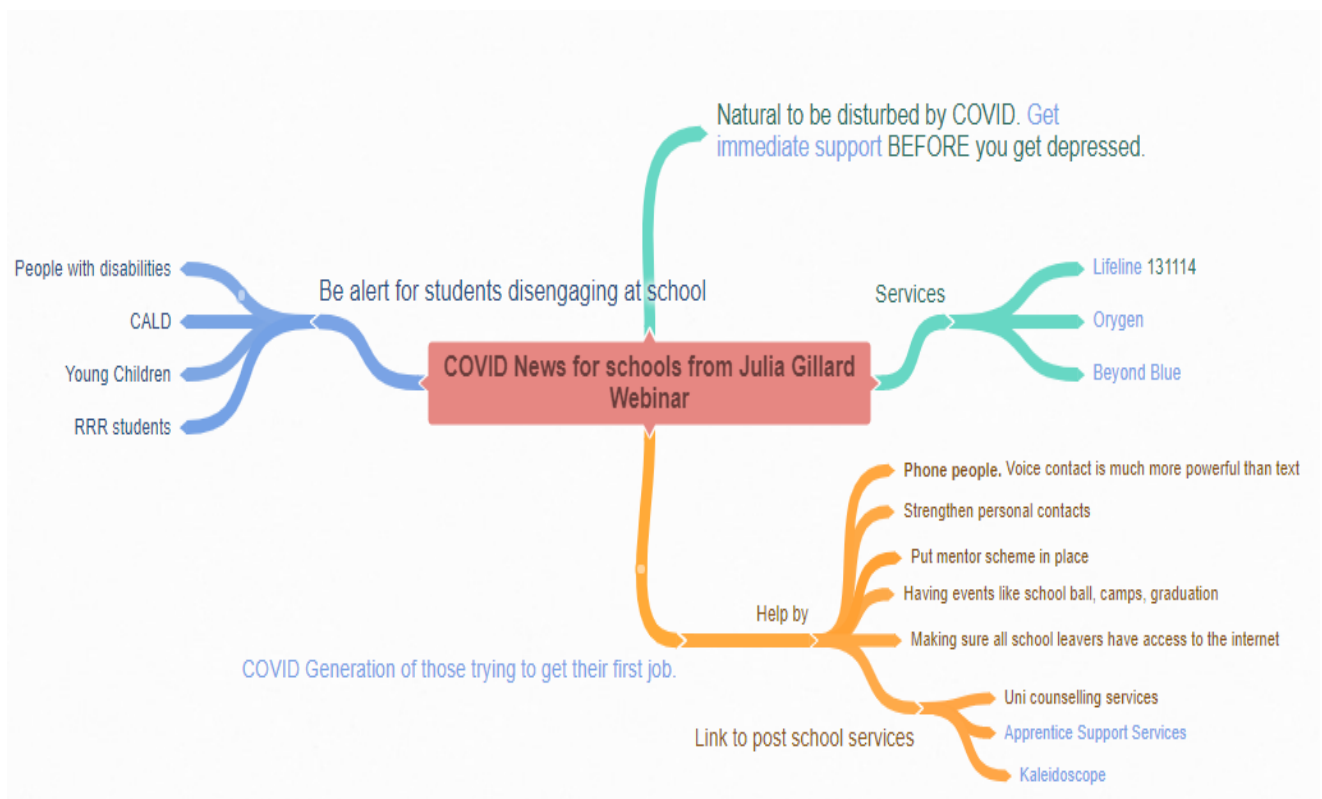

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Social researchers have identified a COVID Generation of young people coming of age into an economic downturn. There is evidence that there will be long term negative economic impact on the COVID Generation.
- Financial insecurity and social disconnection were significant contributors to mental health issues. Both are experienced by school leavers.
- There was a lot of background chat about the need for a Universal Basic Income.
- Preexisting issues that have been managed by vulnerable people are now surfacing. Watch for students of CALD families. RRR students were also given a special mention.
- Stepped care for early intervention has been introduced by organisations like Beyond Blue to support people who are feeling down BEFORE they get depressed.

- Government-supported access to psychologists and psychiatrists has doubled. People can now have 20 visits under Medicare. (Although many of the Chat participants said that there were still significant out of pocket expenses per visit.)
- There is a return of trust in experts, and governments.

MINDMAP OF RECOMMENDATIONS

There was so much in the webinar that I have tried to organise it into a mind map. I hope it helps those of you who are noticing worried, sad, and stressed senior students.

There will be an online register which can be accessed by Government agencies and public schools to post vacancies and facilitate student applications. The first students will start their work placements this month.

(Andrew Dunkin from the Institute of Public Administration Australia WA has said that teachers who are looking for placements in the public sector can contact him and he will ask IPAA members if they are willing to help.)

Wayne wanted to make sure the VET courses SIDE is running in schools were meeting industry demands.

The tour included Wellington Discovery Forest and Eco-Centre, Wespine Sawmill and WAPRES Bunbury wharf chipping facility.

Wayne wants to form closer relationships between schools and the industry. He is now looking at the aged care and building industries for another tour. If you would like to be involved you can contact Wayne directly at Wayne.Wilson2@education.wa.edu.au

Orygen

James Whiting from Orygen wrote this article in the CDAA newsletter this month. It is called Finding Ways to Cope: Opportunities for Young People in an Unpredictable Job Market and it delivers some useful and reassuring advice for those of us in the careers world.

Research

Peter Shergold: Review of Secondary School Pathways

This is the Gonski for preparing students school transition.

The Review of Secondary School Pathways is essential professional reading for all involved with senior student education. It is just great to have such a powerful Review to reinforce what we have been saying for a decade.

The TAFE Directors Newsletter (27 July 2020) introduced the Review like this:

Senior secondary students should not be forced to make “binary choices” between university and VET, and should be provided with a more realistic view of the world ahead, according to the federal government’s review of senior secondary pathways.

Headed by Professor Peter Shergold, the review, Looking to the Future, finds that many students at Year 10 are required to choose an inflexible pathway, either in an “academic stream” or a “vocational stream”.

It says the binary decisions that students are often forced to make reinforce stereotypical assumptions about relative prestige, and “give a false expectation of the world ahead”.

“Research suggests that although two-thirds of students have aspirations of a professional or paraprofessional occupation by age 30, these types of positions only represent a third of available job opportunities,” the report says.

“This helps to explain why so many graduates later undertake vocational courses provided by TAFEs and other registered training organisations.”

Learner Profile

It recommends the adoption of Learner Profile – a much broader measure than the ATAR which would include a range of student skills, knowledge and experience, such as work experience, volunteering and personal achievement.

“The singular dominance of the ATAR is unlikely to survive COVID-19,” the report says.

Education Passport

It urges the creation of a digital Education Passport for lifelong learning to allow young people to capture progressively their education and training qualifications and workplace experience.

The report found “many instances of poor practice” with VET-in-schools, and says it should only be done in a high-quality way, otherwise it should be undertaken externally.

The government says it will consider the recommendations of the review and work with the states and territories on a response through Education Council.

Career guidance within and outside schools should be strengthened significantly and accorded higher status.

You can find the Review HERE.

Guiding Principles for Career Development (Second Edition)

These Principles are designed as a quality improvement mechanism that can help you to improve career development work in Australia. There is a Checklist in Appendix A which will help you to self-assess.

If you need any help with establishing your school's plan for achieving these Principles give me a ring. If we get one model, we can then share it across schools.

The Career Industry Council of Australia has created a framework that guides and supports careers work in Australia.

- The Australian Blueprint for Career Development was the first part of this framework.

- Then a set of Professional Standards was developed. I have heard international leaders in career development praise these standards for mentioning equity and diversity. We are advised to integrate this into our practices.
- Finally, there is a set of Guiding Principles and a Second Edition has just been released.

Service Principle	Comment for Staff
1: Promote awareness of the service and service goals	Career advisors can increase recognition of their work by promoting their service and goals in school strategic documents and operational plans.
2: Ensure user entitlement	This is about ensuring high-quality student-centric services are delivered. The quality of service depends on the ongoing professional development of staff. Appendix A provides a good guide on the framework required to assure delivery of this.
3: Users/clients have access to career information and are assisted in their understanding of that information	This is why you subscribe to In Focus Careers!!!
4: Create channels for generating/incorporating user feedback	I am coming to the view that if we don't measure our work, it won't be valued. This Principle could result in generating a whole of school KPI that measures how ready school leavers are to engage with their future "career".

5: Differentiate service provision to accommodate diversity	The pressure to move from ATAR to more diverse educational experiences will support us to achieve this one.
6: Collaborate with other facilitators of career development	The CEAWA, CDAA, all of the uni days for career educators and even sharing information for this newsletter helps to achieve this one.
7: Provide staff with sufficient support to deliver a quality service	This links in with 2 about quality student-centric services and 4 which could be used to measure the outcomes of our work.
8: Monitor outcomes of service provision	This also ties in with 4 .

Higher Level Apprenticeships

Western Australia may be about to look at a new model of apprenticeships, following the release of the Review of Skills, Training and Workforce Development.

The review recommends radical reforms to the apprenticeship system, including “dual and combo trades”, and shortened apprenticeships in non-licensed trades.

“Many industries including resources, agriculture, defence and civil construction are seeing the need for highly skilled individuals with skills crossing two or more traditional trades,” the review said.

It recommends new apprenticeships in civil plant operations, truck driving, rail and civil infrastructure, operator and maintainer roles in big industry, and maintenance of autonomous vehicles and equipment.

I'll get my people to talk to your people

Someone emailed me the other day and asked if she could get her marketing people to get in touch with mine. 😄

Then, a teacher was talking to my daughter Rebecca, also a teacher, about this newsletter. Rebecca said, "That's my Mum."

"What do you mean?" Responded the teacher. "Does she work for them?"

"No,' said Rebecca. "There is just her. She does it all."
