Dear St Raphael's,

I am writing to you because I think computer games are educational and should be allowed in the classroom and these are my three reasons why so get ready to get your mind blown!

Firstly, video games could be perfect for a brain break for all year levels, it could even be perfect for brain breaks as well as for fun and even good for many purposes playing, thinking, imagining and working at the same time!

Secondly, video games are great for practicing many skills which you will need as a person such as entertainment, imagination, teamwork, strategy, trivia, reflexes and many many more you will need for a job and your own life.

Finally, video games are a perfect thing to make new friends as you said yourself and this is the way how, I know this in my own life and guess what it worked! My dad and I are now even closer because of us playing the same game and talking about the game we play, so I'm positive it would work for the school as well.

As you can see, well in your case read, video games are not just a screen they are used for a lot more than just games, as I have listed above. I hope I have convinced you to allow more educational computer games into the classroom.

Yours sincerely,

Steven Mancini in 3/4K

P.S I love video games
