Without knowledge of ethical accounting and financial analysis skills, the business world could collapse. The aim of this unit is to introduce accounting and financial management skills in a non-technical way so you will be able to develop financial and accounting literacy as a life skill. This unit will provide a non-specialist grounding in accounting and financial management so that you can appreciate the financial dimensions of decisions within business. It will enable you to understand the impact of economic transactions on a business's financial and operating capability, as well as give you the ability to recognise the use of accounting information in decision making without getting bogged down in the mechanics of the system. Building on this, you will develop fundamental financial planning and forecasting skills so that you can utilise these skills in life or in business.

Do I need to buy any textbooks?

No. Any required learning resources will be supplied for you as part of your enrolment in the program.

What if I change my mind and don't want to continue?

It is ok to change your mind during your studies – that is often part of the journey as we learn about our interests and goals for the future. Once you commence the program, we will be there to support you, but if you do change your mind, you can exit the program early without any cost or academic penalty. If you leave before the census date, there will be no record of your participation in the program. However, if you exit after the census date you will receive a Withdrawn Without Academic Penalty (WW) grade.
